CHANELHOPPERS

It looks like King Karl was impressively inspired by Heroine McGawan in 'Planet Terror' when designing these pistol-whipped heels. Anyway, this will be a big seller in Moscow (in its lethal form).

WOODEN USB STICK by Outofstockdesign

Wooden USB stick, most of them are just useless crap and not even funny. One really is, as it's crossing the line from analogue to digital, making it desktop-camo for colleagues that tend to "borrow" one's (that normally gets lost somewhere), plus you have two ways to store data.

SLICE ME NICE by greece is for lovers

The marble chopping board-come-herb crusher has the familiar shape of the ultimate seaside accessory, the wooden beach racket, plus the fitting marble ball to crush the herbs. I already have a crush on this one. Chop-chop beach bums!

M80 Stiletto

After a two-hour chase along reefs, sandbars and shallow water off the Florida coast with no escape, drug runners told authorities that it was like being chased by an UFO. It was the M 80 Stiletto, the Navy's latest weapon against drug traffickers in the gulf coast. Using the Twin M hull technology and solely carbon fibres, its draft fully loaded is only about three feet and it runs up to 60 knots, so it gains more speed than any smuggler's nose. Guess coke prices will rise soon in the US.

TOUCHGRIND for iPhone and iPod Touch by Illusion Labs

The first skate game app for iPhones and iPod Touch is closer to finger boarding than the unrealistic stunts you're used to from endless Tony Hawk's Pro Skater sessions. It lacks a bit on trick variety, but at least you can pull Kickflips, Shove It's, Heelflips, Double Flips and even, wow, Dolphin Flips. They've integrated a level-editor, so iPhone gamers around the globe can edit their own skate parks and share them with others via Illusion Labs' webpage. Hope you don't break your fingers like you did last time, finger boarding your cereal bowl. Check the YouTube video on this one. Available in the iPhone App Store in October.
